Whitney on trial: guilty or not?

OUR ROUND-UP OF ALL THE BIG SOAP ACTION FOR THE WEEK AHEAD

EASTENDERS

Luckily for domestic abuser Gray, it seems most of the locals are putting his distracted behaviour down to grief rather than guilt.

Linda feels so sorry for him, she takes his kids to the park to give him a break, and even does a spot of cleaning. But instead of being grateful, he flips out when he discovers she's washed Chantelle's mug. How will Linda react, and will this glimpse of his nasty temper make anyone start asking questions?

It's to be hoped Gray can keep his rage under control when he's asked to deliver the final statements in Whitney's trial after her QC comes down with food poisoning. He turns up looking dishevelled but, when the verdict is announced, will he have done enough to keep his client out of jail?

Elsewhere, Stacey tries to steal some expensive booze from the club, only to find herself hiding under the desk while an unsuspecting Martin and Ruby get amorous in the office.

Word reaches Denise on the Walford grapevine about Phil's visits to Raymond, while Mick is feeling stressed.

CORONATION STREET

A mysterious body lies in the local mortuary, which is convenient for Todd – he thinks he can persuade Eileen to pretend it's him, thus faking his own death and getting gangster Mick Costello off his back for good.

However, Eileen's conscience won't allow it, so Mary, of all people, comes up with an idea to help. It draws Costello to Weatherfield, where he calls on Eileen – and discovers Todd hiding upstairs. The villain then holds mother and son at gunpoint.

Clearly some fast talking frees them, because before you know it, Costello is turning his attention to Gary – he believes the erstwhile builder is involved in Todd's scam and gives him a beating.

Gary is also strapped for cash. When Ray finds out, he offers to take the factory off his hands. On learning that Ray has been keen to snap up other properties in the area, Gary suspects the businessman is up to something, so decides to push him in an attempt to find out what he's up to.

EMMERDALE

Will is shocked to discover that Dawn slept with Ellis, but he's even more taken aback when his daughter admits she
